I am a maker of things residing in Hammond, Indiana. Pen and paper are my most used tools and I have been drawing since childhood. The paper planes featured on my traffic box are a nod to my youth which was frequently spent scrawling out illustrations within steno notebooks and on the margins of class notes. Ballpoint pens, college bound notebooks, and boredom helped mold me into the artist I am today. Drawing was how I learned to communicate and make sense of the world/myself as a visual thinker. We live in such a fast paced, web based society now; it is hard to keep up. My planes are representative of that too: of communication and the overall nature of things traveling in every which direction.
